Jacob focuses his practice on advising clients on state and federal environmental laws, addressing environmental matters in real estate and corporate transactions, and representing clients in environmental litigation and related disputes. Jacob's environmental practice encompasses matters arising under the Clean Air Act, emerging PFAS regulatory requirements, and CERCLA's remediation and liability framework.

Jacob earned his law degree from the University of Dayton School of Law, where he served as a Comment Editor on the University of Dayton Law Review. During law school, Jacob interned for a national aerospace company where he gained valuable experience supporting the environmental legal team while also assisting with matters across the company.

Before attending law school, Jacob worked as an environmental consultant where he conducted source emission testing at industrial facilities, and as a municipal pretreatment assistant, supporting NPDES permit compliance and regulatory oversight of permitted industrial users. These experiences provided him with a practical understanding of the technical and regulatory issues underlying environmental law.
