Jeremiah is an experienced trial lawyer who concentrates his practice on tort, product liability, and commercial litigation. With decades of first-chair trial experience in multiple state and federal jurisdictions, Jeremiah leads litigation teams in defense of high exposure lawsuits with the potential to be “nuclear verdicts”. He has successfully defended hundreds of catastrophic personal injury, wrongful death, and business claims all over the country. Jeremiah represents national restaurant chains, gas and electric utility companies, product manufacturers, motor carriers, insurers, and other local, regional, and national companies.

As Co-Leader of the firm’s Product, Tort, & Insurance Litigation Practice Group, Jeremiah has over two decades of experience with all stages of litigation: leading client-focused teams for accident investigation, prelitigation dispute resolution, arbitration, pretrial discovery, trial, and appeal.

Jeremiah is often retained by excess insurance companies in the months leading up to trial as “parachute trial counsel” or monitoring counsel to assist with case evaluation, settlement valuation and negotiation, evidentiary analysis, trial strategy and preparation, and leading the trial team. He is regularly retained to help clients limit their exposure from claims ranging from large-scale disasters resulting in catastrophic injuries to residential fires and consumer product injury claims.

Jeremiah leads the firm’s national Dram Shop Litigation Team with decades of experience handling alcohol service cases all over the country. He also has significant experience litigating complex business disputes and truck wreck cases.
