Jesse focuses his practice on a variety of municipal law issues including planning and zoning matters, annexations, city and village code enforcement, and municipal prosecution. He also litigates matters involving eminent domain and takings cases, public nuisance matters, and lawsuits involving police.

Jesse graduated second in his class from Capital University Law School in 2018 and served on the Capital University Law Review as a staff member and as an associate notes editor. Prior to and during law school, Jesse worked full time in the Ohio Attorney General's Office in a variety of roles, including central Ohio regional director and contracts manager for outside counsel. Jesse uses his eight years of government service to assist his clients in dealing with state government policies and procedures.
