Putin Wants to Hack Our Elections. Here's How We Stop It.

Jun 03, 2022

Categories:

In the News

Authors:

Trey Grayson

CivicPoint Managing Director Trey Grayson and former Republican Congressman Reid Ribble, both of whom are members of the National Council on Election Integrity, weigh in on the cybersecurity threat posed by Russia in the run-up to the 2022 midterm elections. Given that the war in Ukraine has magnified tensions between the U.S. and Russia, there's a real possibility that Putin's government will retaliate with cyber-attacks targeting America's election systems. This op-ed, which is available in full on Fox News, looks at what the Biden administration, Congress, and election administrators can do to strengthen our country's election infrastructure. "It's time that we start investing in defenses commensurate with the seriousness of the risk."

The content on this page was originally published by CivicPoint LLC, a former, now-closed subsidiary of Frost Brown Todd LLP, and may be outdated or no longer applicable. Please consult with Frost Brown Todd's Lobbying & Public Policy Practice Group for current, accurate information on the topics presented on this page.

© 2026 FBT Gibbons LLP. May be considered attorney advertising in some jurisdictions.

2026 FBT Gibbons LLP. All rights reserved. ADVERTISING MATERIAL.

FBT Gibbons