Frost Brown Todd's (FBT) Cincinnati office was recognized by the United Way of Greater Cincinnati as no. 17 on its list of the area's Top 25 "Workplaces That Care" in 2023, up from no. 18 in 2022. This designation recognizes the organizations with the highest total employee and corporate donations in support of the United Way of Greater Cincinnati's community and charitable initiatives.

FBT's Cincinnati office reflects the city's philanthropic culture, and its team of more than 300 attorneys and business professionals works alongside clients and neighbors to support organizations like United Way that do vital social service work. One of the two largest law firms in Greater Cincinnati, FBT has a longstanding commitment to community service and philanthropy, with more than a third of the office's attorneys volunteering with the Pro Bono Partnership of Ohio and dozens of other charitable organizations.

"We're proud to continue our support for United Way's work, which provides essential assistance to families and children in our community, from improving food security and financial health to improving educational outcomes," said Cincinnati Partner-in-Charge Chris Habel. "As a firm, Frost Brown Todd has a culture of giving back, which is why we are the one Cincinnati law firm that has consistently been in United Way's Top 25 for years."

United Way of Greater Cincinnati will hold an event on February 22 to formally recognize the awardees as role models in creating cultures of caring and empowering their employees to give back.
